PRESS RELEASE

October 10, 2008

NEW YORK CITY Autism/Asperger's Conference Educating & Healing Children with Autism Saturday & Sunday, October 11-12, 2008

A two-day conference on autism and Asperger's Syndrome is being held this weekend in New York City at the Stephen Gaynor School at 148 West 90th Street, between Amsterdam and Columbus Avenue, New York, N.Y. (flyer attached). The National Autism Association - New York Metro Chapter is proud to collaborate with Autism Conferences of America to bring this exciting event to New York City.

Saturday's session is devoted to "Educating Children with Autism" and features nationally-renowned education expert Barbara Doyle, M.S..

Sunday's session is entitled "Healing Children & Adults with Autism" and features many nationally renowned experts, including keynote speaker Dr. Sydney Baker, addressing an array of medical and biomedical interventions for treating those affected by autism spectrum disorders.

This is a unique two-day conference devoted to both educating and healing, with a focus on biomedical approaches and a wide range of treatment options.

The conference is targeted to families, educators, and providers whose lives have been affected by autism spectrum disorders. Those interested can attend one or both days of the program and registration will be available at the door.

For detailed information about the conference, visit the NAA-New York Metro website at:
www.naanyc.org

On-site registration will be available on both days.
